Nina Olson

United States Taxpayer Advocate
IRS, Washington D.C., USA

Nina Olson heads the Taxpayer Advocate Service. Twice a year, she submits a report to Congress identifying the top problems taxpayers face with the IRS, and analyses how the IRS can ameliorate those problems. Through the report, she is the only IRS employee authorized to make legislative proposals directly to Congress. Nina Olson is “truly an independent voice inside the IRS”.

„The Influence of Taxpayer and Tax Administration Culture on Compliance”

A “burning question” for governments and researchers today is whether tax compliance will increase and be maintained if tax agencies cultivate a relationship of trust with their taxpayers. Nina Olson, the National Taxpayer Advocate of the U.S. Internal Revenue Service, will discuss her office’s recent and planned research into taxpayer attitudes and acceptance of government, taxation, and the tax agency, and what a tax agency might do to influence greater trust, including the adoption of a taxpayer bill of rights.
